About 70% of India is poverty. India is the third larges in the world economically, but when measured in USD exchanged- rate terms, it is the twelfth largest. In the year 2000, India's population was 1.014 billion. Corruption is a huge problem in India; things such as bribes and embezzlement still exist and bring India down.

Meanwhile, Native American advocacy groups such as the National Congress of American Indians have launched large-scale campaigns to eliminate harmful media portrayals and garner public support for changes. One example of those campaigns is Proud to Be: The Campaign to End Harmful Indian Mascots. While these movements typically cite history to support their cause, they also are bolstered by a body of research on the negative psychological effects of such portrayals on indigenous people.
