The Paris Temple was the Templar headquarters in France. The area was nothing more than a riverside swamp (marais) until the Knights Templar drained the land in the 1140s and built their headquarters in its northern part, then outside the city walls. Nothing of the Temple survives today, and it is remembered only by a street name in the Quartier du Temple, the northern part of the area known as the Marais, which is on the Right Bank just west of the Bastille.

On 12 May 1310 in a field outside Paris the fifty-four Templars were burned at the stake.
